Program Student Learning Outcomes

Upon completion of this degree from KSU, students will be able to:

1. Identify credible literary, historical, or theoretical works exploring themes of diversity, inclusion, equity, or social justice that relate to the wellbeing of vulnerable youth or behavioral health issues in a rural community.
2. Discuss participation in open-ended and unscripted encounters that focus on regional and global diversity concerns likely to impact future community action and/or career.
3. Discuss how interdisciplinary strategies and intercultural concepts can prompt insightful dialogue and collaboration for impactful social change in a diverse global society.
4. Model theoretical and/or historical examples of community-engaged scholarship.
5. Design a community impact plan that relates to a selected area of focus or career path using equity mindedness and/or an interdisciplinary methodology.
